

To pick up, or not pick up the phone, would you press the button?

*heck
Yeah*

no Way!

You picked up the phone! And now, you've opened up that 15 second video your friend sent you.

The phone stays face down! You've made the choice that the majority wouldn't dare to. Congratulations!

1. Instantaneously, there's a surge of dopamine from your brain.

You feel happy! Hooray! And just as fast as it came, that feel-good rush has vanished. Luckily you know exactly where to get more... You scroll.

2. What number was that one? You just can't seem to stop.

These non-stop pulses of dopamine create an everlasting feeling of joy!

But now, moments you're not taking in these 15 second videos – any choice you make that doesn't trigger that release of dopamine within seconds, are completely incomprehensible to your brain. It's an addiction to stimulation.

3. Never unlock your true potential.

And when it's time to put it down to study, to do an exam, or to simply exist, the phone may be away, but it never leaves your mind. Consistently choosing to pick it up and watch short-form content actively undermines you and your capacity to fulfil your ambitions.

Your attention span is 8 seconds. Your concentration is dull. Your memory has waned. What can you possibly achieve like this?

1. An unbroken focus!

If you can muster the strength to say 'No' once, you can do it again and again! By ignoring that notification, you've reduced that possibility of straying from your set goals, pushing yourself a step towards a better you.

2. You've cut short your need for entertainment!

If you can muster the strength to say 'No' once, you can do it again and again!

By ignoring that notification, you've reduced that possibility of straying from your set goals, pushing yourself a step towards a better you.

3. Sit happily with a clear head when in silence.

When you tell yourself 'Yes' and open yourself to these never-ending surges of dopamine, it's all you ever continue to want.

Whether in an exam or working on your hand-in assignments, you who picks 'No' can be free from a corrupted conscience that's shouting and screaming for a distraction.

To let yourself do everything and anything but the one thing you must, will forever prevent you from growing into anything more than you are now.

Whether you did or didn't push the button, how do you take control of what's limiting your potential?

Tips to ChaNge

1. Turn off your notification

Notifications exist to tempt you to look at your phone! Conglomerates don't care if your friend sent you a TikTok or shared you a reel on Instagram and Facebook!

Their goal is to get you on their app and STAY THERE.

2. Set screen time limits!

Screen time limits may SEEM useless because you can click "Dismiss for 15 minutes" or "Ignore for the day".

However, for each time you click "Remind me later" and merrily scroll on your way, remember what's happening to your mind. Make the right decision.

P.S. Have someone set up a PASSWORD that you don't know to keep you off for good!

3. Out of sight, out of mind

A phone should not be at your desk as you study!
A phone should not be who you eat your meals with!
A phone should not be the one to kiss you goodnight as you go to bed!

When doing things as simple as survival, keep your phone out of your hands—Out of sight.

Reduce your dependence on needing to pick up that phone for a dangerous buzz of dopamine.

help is here!

You are not any less because you chose YES. This is an issue we all experience. With great determination, drive and discipline, you CAN make the more positive choice for yourself and your future.

So if you're stressed, don't stay in distress!
We at DA are here for you!

Contact MISS LAI or MR KING who will connect you with a team of GEMs who are ready to correct your relationship with the digital distractions that love you.